

Contents

|   |           |
|---|-----------|
| List of Figures and Tables                     | xi        |
| Preface  | xii       |
| Acknowledgements                               | xiv       |
| 1 Introduction                                 | 1  |
| The nature of counselling and psychotherapy           | 3         |
| Social support  | 3         |
| Defining counselling and psychotherapy                | 6         |
| Setting the scene                                     | 9         |
| Distress, deviance, dysfunction, and dangerousness    | 10        |
| Different therapeutic approaches                      | 11        |
| Eclectic and integrated approaches                    | 17        |
| Research mindedness                                   | 18        |
| Conclusion  | 20        |
| Summary points  | 20        |
| Topics for reflection                                 | 21        |
| 2 Biomedical and Medical Approaches            | 22 |
| Introduction  | 22        |
| History of the biomedical model                       | 23        |
| Scientific medicine                                   | 25        |
| Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders | 26        |
| Scientific use of DSM                                 | 28        |
| Some criticisms of DSM                                | 33        |
| Biomedical approaches                                 | 34        |
| Therapies based on the biomedical model               | 38        |
| Treatment–aetiology fallacy                           | 42        |
| Conclusion  | 43        |
| Summary points  | 44        |
| Topics for reflection                                 | 45        |
| 3 Psychoanalytic and Psychodynamic Approaches  | 46 |
| Introduction  | 46        |
| Sigmund Freud and the psychoanalytical model          | 46        |
| Psychoanalytical theory                               | 47        |
| Criticisms of psychoanalysis                          | 55        |

|  |           |
|--|-----------|
| Psychoanalysis   | 58        |
| Psychodynamic therapy                                      | 60        |
| Neo-Freudian psychodynamic models                          | 60        |
| Jung and analytical psychology                             | 60        |
| Alfred Adler and individual psychology                     | 62        |
| Melanie Klein and object relations                         | 64        |
| John Bowlby and attachment theory                          | 65        |
| Erik Erikson and ego psychology                            | 66        |
| Does psychodynamic therapy work?                           | 69        |
| Conclusion   | 69        |
| Summary points   | 70        |
| Topics for reflection                                      | 71        |
| 4 Behavioural and Cognitive Approaches              | 72 |
| Introduction   | 72        |
| Behavioural model  | 72        |
| Ivan Pavlov and classical conditioning                     | 73        |
| Psychology as the behaviourist views it                    | 75        |
| B.F. Skinner and operant conditioning                      | 76        |
| Mowrer's two-factor theory                                 | 77        |
| Behaviour therapy  | 77        |
| Joseph Wolpe and systematic desensitization                | 79        |
| Flooding   | 80        |
| Aversion therapy   | 81        |
| Albert Bandura and modelling                               | 81        |
| Reinforcement-based techniques                             | 82        |
| Cognitive model: Albert Ellis and Aaron Beck               | 84        |
| Albert Ellis and rational emotive behaviour therapy (REBT) | 85        |
| Aaron Beck and cognitive therapy                           | 88        |
| Cognitive-behavioural approaches                           | 90        |
| Does CBT work?   | 93        |
| Criticisms of cognitive-behavioural approaches             | 93        |
| Conclusion   | 94        |
| Summary points   | 95        |
| Topics for reflection                                      | 96        |
| 5 Humanistic and Transpersonal Approaches           | 97 |
| Introduction   | 97        |
| Carl Rogers and the person-centred approach                | 98        |
| Criticisms of the client-centred approach                  | 104       |
| Humanistic attitudes towards the medical model             | 106       |
| Does client-centred therapy work?                          | 106       |
| Current directions   | 107       |

---

|  |            |
|--|------------|
| Pre-therapy  | 107        |
| Process-experiential approach                                | 108        |
| Motivational interviewing                                    | 108        |
| Other humanistic-existential approaches                      | 109        |
| Fritz Perls and Gestalt therapy                              | 109        |
| Eric Berne and transactional analysis                        | 111        |
| Existential approaches                                       | 114        |
| Transpersonal psychotherapy                                  | 115        |
| Abraham Maslow and the hierarchy of needs                    | 116        |
| Stanislav Grof and the transpersonal                         | 118        |
| Ken Wilber and levels of consciousness                       | 120        |
| Conclusion   | 122        |
| Summary points   | 123        |
| Topics for reflection  | 123        |
| 6 Sociological and Social Approaches                  | 124 |
| Introduction   | 124        |
| Social construction of therapy                               | 124        |
| Berger and Luckmann and the sociology of knowledge           | 124        |
| Thomas Szasz and the myth of mental illness                  | 125        |
| Structuralism, mental health, and therapy                    | 127        |
| How social factors cause problems                            | 129        |
| Cultural worldviews  | 130        |
| Challenging medicalization                                   | 132        |
| Labelling  | 135        |
| Social approaches  | 136        |
| Social systems   | 138        |
| Conclusion   | 140        |
| Summary points   | 141        |
| Topics for reflection  | 141        |
| 7 Developments in Eclectic and Integrative Approaches | 142 |
| Introduction   | 142        |
| Commonalities across therapeutic approaches                  | 143        |
| Self-disclosure  | 143        |
| Therapeutic relationship                                     | 144        |
| Non-specific factors   | 145        |
| Drawing it all together                                      | 148        |
| Putting it into practice                                     | 152        |
| Eclectic approaches  | 152        |
| Integrative approaches                                       | 155        |
| Narrative approaches   | 156        |
| Pluralistic approaches                                       | 157        |

|                               |     |
|-------------------------------|-----|
| Is a unified theory possible? | 157 |
| Basic assumptions             | 158 |
| Where next?                   | 159 |
| Evidence-based therapy        | 159 |
| Values-based therapy          | 160 |
| Conclusion                    | 162 |
| Summary points                | 163 |
| Topics for reflection         | 163 |
| References             | 164 |
| Index                  | 181 |