

Contents

General Editor's preface	vii
Acknowledgements	ix
1 Introduction	1
The aims and rationale of this book	1
Background research: how popular musicians learn	5
The underlying principles of the project	9
The project in historical perspective	11
Research methods	14
The beginning, and the ends, of the project	21
2 The project's pedagogy and curriculum content	23
Stages 1–7: overall pedagogy and content	23
Teachers' initial responses and the apparent conflict with official approaches	27
The role of the teacher: an overview	30
The start of Stage 1: chaos, its aftermath and the questions it raised	38
3 Making music	41
Social distinction and the emergence of 'natural music learning practices'	41
Listening, choosing and beginning to copy: an example from the first lesson	43
Listening and choosing the song	45
Singing	46
A note on the availability of instruments in the classrooms	47
Playing untuned percussion	48
Finding pitches on instruments	50
Progression: getting worse before you get better	52
The authority of the CD as distinct from the authority of the teacher	54
'Flow' and 'play'	56
'Feel' and 'musicking'	59
A note on musical composition, improvisation and creativity	62
What counts as learning in music-making?	62
Pupils' and teachers' views of the learning outcomes	62
4 Listening and appreciation	67
Pupils' musical vocabulary	68
Pupils' aural approaches to the task: purposive listening	71
The further development of pupils' listening capacities	73

Listening beyond the project	75
Music appreciation	78
The progression of listening and appreciation through Stages 1–5	80
Music appreciation and the development of ‘critical musicality’	83
Teachers’ views on listening	85
Listening, musical meaning and experience in the classroom	87
5 Enjoyment: making music and having autonomy	93
Bobby’s group: ‘cause it was boring’	94
Enjoyment, ‘fun’ and the ‘normal’ curriculum: learner autonomy and curriculum choice	95
Learner autonomy and pedagogy	102
Stage 2 and on	110
Enjoyment, motivation and application: teachers’ expectations and views	113
6 Group co-operation, ability and inclusion	119
Group learning and peer-directed learning in the music classroom	119
Group co-operation, group learning and peer-directed learning as learning outcomes	132
Ability, achievement and differentiation	135
Disaffected pupils	140
7 Informal learning with classical music	149
The rationale, pedagogy and curriculum content of Stages 6 and 7	150
Pupils’ views of classical music	154
Observations and interviews in Stages 6 and 7	158
Did pupils’ views of classical music change?	168
The ‘normal curriculum’, classical music and ‘other’ music	175
Teachers’ views of the classical stages	178
Why did pupils’ views of classical music change?	180
8 Afterword	181
Appendix A Information about schools	187
Appendix B The project stages in brief	193
Bibliography	195
Index	209