

Table of Contents

Foreword	xvii
Preface to the American Edition	xxiii
Translator's Preface	xxv

First Part

THE FINAL DEVELOPMENTS AND THE DISSOLUTION OF THE PERIPATETIC SCHOOL AND THE GREAT HELLENISTIC SCHOOLS

First Section

THE REDISCOVERY OF THE ESOTERIC WORKS OF ARISTOTLE, NEO-ARISTOTELIANISM, AND THE LIMITS OF ITS HISTORICAL-PHILOSOPHICAL IMPORTANCE.

- I. The Two-Century Eclipse of the Peripatos in the Hellenistic Age 7
 1. Lycon
 2. Hieronymus of Rhodes
 3. Ariston of Ceos (Keos)
 4. Critolaus of Phaselis
 5. Diodorus of Tyre

- II. The Rediscovery of the Esoteric Writings of Aristotle, the Great Edition of Andronicus of Rhodes, and the Slow Rebirth of Aristotelian Philosophy in the First Century before the Common Era 11
 1. The misadventures of the esoteric writings of Aristotle and their publication
 2. The criteria followed by Andronicus of Rhodes in his edition of the Corpus Aristotelicum
 3. The exponents and tendencies of Peripatetic philosophy in the first century before the Common Era

- III. The New Course of Aristotelianism in the First Two Centuries of the Common Era 21
 1. The consolidation and diffusion of the commentary genre concerning the esoteric works
 2. The Platonic and Middle Platonic influences on the Aristotelianism of the Common Era

- IV. The Neo-Aristotelianism of Alexander of Aphrodisias 27
 1. The cornerstones of the metaphysics of Alexander and their significance
 2. The doctrine of Nous and its novelty

3. The presence of a mystical component in the metaphysics of Alexander

Second Section

THE FINAL TESTIMONY OF THE FOLLOWERS OF
THE PHILOSOPHY OF THE GARDEN AND THE WORDS OF EPICURUS INCISED IN STONE

- I. The Revival of Epicureanism in the First Two Centuries of the Common Era 37
 1. Testimony concerning the vitality and diffusion of the philosophy of the Garden in the Imperial Age
 2. The permanent stability of the teachings of Epicureanism and the accentuation of its characteristics as a secular religion
 3. The prestige achieved by Epicurus and the Epicureans in the Imperial Age
- II. Diogenes of Oenoanda 45
 1. The portico constructed by Diogenes of Oenoanda and its purpose
 2. The exposition of the physical doctrines
 3. The exposition of the ethics
- III. The Dissolution of Epicureanism 49

Third Section

THE REBIRTH OF THE PHILOSOPHY OF THE PORCH AT ROME AND NEO-STOICISM

- I. Final Phase of the Stoa 53
 1. The vitality and diffusion of Stoicism in the Imperial Age
 2. The characteristics of Neo-Stoicism
- II. Seneca 57
 1. The characteristics of the thought of Seneca
 2. God and the Divine
 3. The conception of man
 4. Conscience
 5. Will
 6. The sense of sin
 7. The equality of all human beings and mutual love
 8. The purported relationship between Seneca and St. Paul
- III. Musonius Rufus 69
 1. The accentuation of the practical aspect of philosophy

2. Practice as the actuation of virtue and goodness
 3. New starting points
- IV. Epictetus, the Slave Philosopher 75
1. The characteristics of the Stoicism of Epictetus
 2. The fundamental principle of the ethics of Epictetus
 3. An ethically relevant tripartition of philosophy
 4. Prohairesis or basic moral choice
 5. The new rational attitude toward the divine
 6. The kinship of man with God and the brotherhood of man
 7. The praise to God
- V. Marcus Aurelius, the Emperor Philosopher 89
1. The characteristics of the Stoicism of Marcus Aurelius
 2. The cosmic flux and the transiency of all things
 3. The reaffirmation of Stoic pantheistic monism
 4. The new anthropology: man as body, soul, and mind
 5. The refuge in interiority
 6. The new spirit
- VI. The Dissolution of the Philosophy of the Stoa 101

Fourth Section

THE REBIRTH OF PYRRHONISM AND NEO-SKEPTICISM

- I. Aenesidemus and the Reinterpretation of Pyrrhonism 105
 1. The reasons for the rebirth of Pyrrhonism and its characteristics
 2. The ten tropes, or the list of the highest categories of doubt
 3. The negation of truth, of the principle of causality, and of the possibility of meta-empirical inference
 4. The relations between the skepticism of Aenesidemus and Heracliteanism
 5. Moral ideas
- II. Agrippa and the Developments of Neo-Skepticism 125
 1. The Sceptics after Aenesidemus
 2. The new list of the tropes of Agrippa
 3. The meaning of the new list of the tropes
- III. Sextus Empiricus and the Final Developments of Ancient Skepticism 129
 1. A brief characterization of the tendencies of Greek medicine with particular regard to the empirical tendency
 2. Menodotus between empirical medicine and Skepticism

3. The new plane on which Sextus Empiricus reformulated Skepticism
4. Life without dogma, or life without philosophy, according to Sextus
5. The systematic critique by Sextus of all the sciences and philosophy

IV. The Exhaustion of Skepticism 141

Fifth Section

THE REBIRTH OF CYNICISM

- I. The Revival of Cynicism in the Imperial Age and its Characteristics 145
- II. The Stoicizing and Religious Currents of Cynicism in the Imperial Age 147
 1. Demetrius
 2. Dio Cocceianus (Chrysostomos)
- III. The Current of Cynicism of the Imperial Age Inspired by Contentious Ancient Radicalism 153
 1. Oenomaus of Gadara
 2. Demonax of Cyprus
 3. Peregrinus Proteus
- IV. The Cynicism of the Imperial Age as a Phenomena of the Masses and its Internal Contradictions 159

Second Part

THE REDISCOVERY OF THE INCORPOREAL AND THE TRANSCENDENT

PHILO OF ALEXANDRIA,
THE REVIVAL OF PLATONISM AND PYTHAGOREANISM,
THE HERMETIC WRITINGS, AND THE CHALDEAN ORACLES

First Section

PHILO OF ALEXANDRIA AND MOSAIC PHILOSOPHY

- I. The Origin, the Components, and the Basic Problems of the Philosophy of Philo of Alexandria 169
 1. The origin of Philonian thought and its role in the history of ancient philosophy
 2. The Hellenic component
 3. The Jewish Component
 4. Philonian allegories and their Greek and Jewish antecedents

- II. Philo and the Prelude to a Great Development in Western Thought 177
 - 1. The first formulation of the problem of the relations between divine revelation and philosophy, that is, between faith and reason
 - 2. Toward the break in the Hellenistic framework of philosophical knowledge: the emergence into the foreground of theology and the proclamation of the primacy of "speculative wisdom" (σοφία) over "practical wisdom" (φρόνησις)

- III. Metaphysics, Theology, and the Theory of Being of Philo 181
 - 1. The overcoming of the materialistic and immanentistic presuppositions of the Hellenistic systems and the reaffirmation of the incorporeal and the transcendent
 - 2. The new conception of God
 - 3. The first philosophical formulation of the doctrine of Creation
 - 4. The doctrine of the Logos
 - 5. The doctrine of Powers
 - 6. The doctrine of the Ideas and the Philonian reform
 - 7. The souls without bodies and the Angels

- IV. The Anthropology and Moral Philosophy of Philo 197
 - 1. The new conception of the nature of man or the three dimensions of being human
 - 2. The overcoming of the ethical intellectualism of Greek philosophy and the proclamation of faith as the highest virtue
 - 3. The journey to God, mystical union with God, and ecstasy

Second Section

MIDDLE PLATONISM AND THE REDISCOVERY
OF PLATONIC METAPHYSICS

- I. The Development, Characteristics, and Exponents of Middle Platonism 207
 - 1. The ultimate fate of the Academy and development of Middle Platonism
 - 2. General characteristics of Middle Platonism
 - 3. The exponents and tendencies of Middle Platonism
 - 4. The historical and theoretical importance and the limits of Middle Platonism

- II. The Metaphysics of Middle Platonism 215
 - 1. Incorporeal being, God and his transcendence

2. The Ideas as thoughts of God and the distinction between the first intelligibles or transcendent Ideas and the second intelligibles or the immanent forms of things
 3. The hierarchy of the divine: toward the doctrine of hypostasis
 4. The cosmology of Middle Platonism: matter and the origin of the cosmos
 5. The daimonology of Middle Platonism
- III. The Anthropology and Ethics of Middle Platonism 229
1. The supreme end of man and his assimilation to God
 2. The spiritual nature of man and the dualistic conception of soul and body
 3. The list of values and virtues
 4. The ethics of Middle Platonism and the Stoa

Third Section

THE REVIVAL OF PYTHAGOREAN PHILOSOPHY, ITS SUCCESSIVE STAGES, AND THE FINAL FUSION OF NEO-PYTHAGOREANISM AND MIDDLE PLATONISM

- I. The Documents, the Exponents, the Currents, and the Characteristics of the Pythagoreanism of the Hellenistic and the Imperial Ages 237
1. The misadventures of the Pythagorean School
 2. The forgeries attributed to some ancient Pythagoreans in the Hellenistic and the Imperial Age and their probable significance
 3. The so-called doxographical reports by anonymous Pythagoreans
 4. The new Pythagoreans who write under their own name
 5. Characteristics of the Pythagoreanism of the Hellenistic and Imperial Ages
- II. The Doctrinal Bases of Neo-Pythagoreanism 251
1. The recovery of the incorporeal and the reaffirmation of its metaphysical primacy
 2. The methodological, metaphysical, and theological meaning of numbers in Neo-Pythagoreanism
 3. The doctrine of the highest principles of the Monad and the Dyad and the attempted deduction of all reality from a supreme Unity
 4. The mystical ideal of human life
- III. Numenius of Apamea and the Fusion of Neo-Pythagoreanism and Middle Platonism 263

1. The philosophical position of Numenius
2. The proclamation of the absolute preëminence of the incorporeal
3. The structure of incorporeal being and the doctrine of the three Gods
4. The Neo-Pythagorean doctrine of the Monad and the Dyad in the context of the Numenian theory of being
5. Matter, evil soul, and good soul
6. Numenius at the threshold of Neoplatonism

Fourth Section

THE HERMETIC WRITERS AND THE CHALDEAN ORACLES

- I. The Phenomenon of Hermeticism and its Different Aspects 275
 1. Hermes Trismegistus and the Hermetic literature
 2. The basic characteristics of Hermeticism
 3. God, the hierarchy of the divine, the development of the cosmos and the man in the Corpus Hermeticum
 4. The Mind, knowledge, and salvation
 5. Ecstasy and the eschatology in Hermeticism
- II. The Chaldean Oracles and their Historical Importance 285
 1. The origin of the Chaldean Oracles
 2. The philosophical doctrines of the Chaldean Oracles
 3. The magical wisdom and the theurgy of the Chaldean Oracles

Third Part

PLOTINUS AND NEOPLATONISM

First Section

THE ORIGIN OF NEOPLATONISM: FROM THE SCHOOL OF AMMONIUS AT ALEXANDRIA TO THE SCHOOL OF PLOTINUS AT ROME

- I. Ammonius Saccas and his School at Alexandria 297
 1. The enigma of Ammonius Saccas
 2. The testimonies of Hierocles and Nemesius on the thought of Ammonius
 3. The followers of Ammonius
- II. The School of Plotinus at Rome and the Origin of the Enneads 303
 1. From Alexandria to Rome
 2. Characteristics and purposes of the Plotinian school
- III. The Revival and Conclusion of the "Second Voyage" 307
 1. The relation between Plotinus and preceding philosophers

2. Plotinus truly carried to full development the positions of Middle Platonism and Neo-Pythagoreanism
 3. The relations between Plotinus, Eastern thought, Philo, Gnosticism, and Christianity
 4. The cornerstones of Plotinian thought, their relations with preceding speculation, and their novelty
 5. The method of Plotinus
- IV. The Possible Methods for Interpreting and Expounding Plotinian Thought 319
1. The interpretations proposed by historians of philosophy
 2. The way followed in the present exposition
 3. The articulation of the system

Second Section

THE FOUNDATION AND STRUCTURE OF THE SYSTEM OF PLOTINUS

- I. The First Hypostasis: the One 325
1. Preliminary demonstration of the existence of the One and of the three hypostases
 2. The infinitude, absolute transcendence and the ineffability of the One
 3. The positive characterizations of the One
 4. The One as free self-productive activity
 5. The procession of all things from the One
- II. The Second Hypostasis: the Mind (Nous) 341
1. The two-fold relation which binds the One and the Mind (Nous)
 2. The Mind (Nous) as Being, Thought, and Life
 3. The Mind (Nous) as the "intelligible cosmos"
 4. The categories of the Intelligible world
- III. The Third Hypostasis: the Soul 351
1. The procession of the Soul from the Mind (Nous) and the two-fold relation which occurs between Soul and Mind (Nous)
 2. The essential characteristic and the fundamental role of the Soul in the Plotinian system
 3. The Soul and its intermediate position
 4. The multiplicity of the Soul
 5. Soul, Physis, and Logos
- IV. The Procession of the Sensible from the Intelligible, the Meaning and the Value of the Physical Cosmos 361

1. The problem of the deduction of the physical world
 2. The procession of the matter of the sensible world and its characteristics
 3. The forms and rational design of the world, their origin, and their relations with matter
 4. The origin of temporality
 5. The origin of the corporeal and of spatiality and their nature
 6. The positive character of the corporeal world
- V. The Origin, Nature, and Destiny of Man 373
1. Man prior to his descent into the corporeal world
 2. The descent into bodies
 3. Man and the relations between Soul and body
 4. The activities and functions of the Soul
 5. Man and his liberty
 6. The eschatological destiny of the soul and the supreme goal of man
 7. The reform of the list of values
 8. The ways of returning to the Absolute
 9. The reunification with the One
 10. Ecstasy
- VI. Nature and Originality of Plotinian Metaphysics 393
1. Plotinian metaphysics is not a form of emanationism of an Eastern type, or a form of pantheism, or a form of creationism
 2. The liberty of the One, the "procession," and the "return"
 3. Creative contemplation

Third Section

THE DEVELOPMENTS OF NEOPLATONISM AND THE END OF ANCIENT GREEK-PAGAN PHILOSOPHY

- I. A Comprehensive Overview of the Schools, the Exponents, and the Tendencies of Neoplatonism 401
 1. Some methodological remarks concerning the reconstruction of the history of Neoplatonism
 2. The schools and the exponents of Neoplatonism
 3. The various tendencies of the Neoplatonic schools
- II. The Immediate Followers of Plotinus 405
 1. Amelius
 2. Porphyry
- III. Iamblichus and the Syriac School 411

1. Iamblichus and the new course of Neoplatonic Philosophy
 2. The metaphysics and theology of Iamblichus
 3. Iamblichus and theurgy
 4. The canons for the interpretation of classical texts
 5. Theodorus of Asinus and other followers of Iamblichus
- IV. The School of Pergamum 421
1. Characteristics and exponents of the school of Pergamum
 2. Julian (the Apostate)
 3. Sallustius
- V. Proclus and the School at Athens 425
1. The origin of the school at Athens
 2. The predecessors of Proclus: Plutarch of Athens, Syrianus, and Domninus
 3. Proclus and his philosophical, theological, and religious synthesis
 4. The structure of the incorporeal, or the Proclean system of the hypostases
 5. The laws which govern the procession of reality from the One according to Proclus
 6. Theurgic virtue
 7. Man and his re-union with the absolute
 8. The successors of Proclus: Marinus, Isidore, Damascius, and Simplicius
- VI. The Second Neoplatonic School of Alexandria 441
1. Characteristics of the final phase of Alexandrine Neoplatonism
 2. The Neoplatonic Alexandrine thinkers and the interaction between Platonism and Christianity
 3. The Alexandrine Neoplatonic Commentators
- VII. The Neoplatonists of the Latin West in Outline 445
- VIII. The End of Ancient-Pagan Philosophy 447
1. The Edict of Justinian and the prohibition of the public teaching of Pagans
 2. The destiny of the Neoplatonists of the School of Athens after the Edict of Justinian
- Abbreviations 451
- Notes 455